PLANS TO TEACH FARMING BY MAIL

(By Associated Press)
Durham, Dec. 12.—New Hampshire college will teach farming by mail this winter to all residents of the state who enroll for the reading courses which are now being offered by the extension service. This move comes partly as continuation of the policy before the war and partly as a result of the feeling that the more technical side of agricultural education has suffered during the extensive production campaign that has been going on. The increased interest in agriculture, it is felt deserves the greatest possible support from the state institution and its Director J. C. Kendall, who announced the courses today, put it, "Where there are people who cannot come to the college, the college will go to them."

Courses are to be given in soils and fertilizers by Dean F. W. Taylor; farm crops, by Assistant Prof. M. G. Eastman; farm stock, by Prof. O. L. Eckman; orchard management, by Prof. J. H. Gourley; dairy farming, by Prof. J. M. Fuller; poultry, by Prof. A. W. Richardson; sheep husbandry, by Assistant Prof. C. J. Fawcett; the farm woodlot, by Prof. K. W. Woodward; bee-keeping, by Assistant Prof. W. H. Wolff; vegetable gardening, by Prof. J. H. Gourley; and feeding the family, by home demonstration leader Bertha T. Tinsworth.

WILL BAN DESERTERS FROM LEAGUE

(By Associated Press)
Chicago, Dec. 12.—The status of baseball players who deserted their clubs last season to join teams in shipyard leagues will be one of the problems at the annual meeting of the Club owners of the American League here today. The absent players, it is said, will be barred from playing in the League. The length of the 1919 season, the opening date, and the player limit for each team are other questions to be considered as well as the personnel of the National Commission. As to the length of the schedule the Club owners seem to be about equally divided between 140 and 151 days. Johnson favors a 140 game schedule as he believes it would eliminate double headers.

Bristol, Eng., Dec. 11.—The war bill of the Allies against Germany is 21,000,000,000 pounds, according to the British Premier Lloyd George, who presented these and other interesting facts before a large audience in a speech here today. Great Britain's estimated cost of the war was 8,000,000,000 pounds. Before the war, the estimated wealth of Germany was between 16 and 20 billion pounds sterling, so that if the entire wealth of Germany was taken it would not pay the bill.

London, Dec. 11.—Premier Lloyd

George said in a speech at Bristol tonight that the military service act was passed to meet a great emergency and this emergency had now passed and the act would lapse. ### NEW YORK WARMLY GREETED SOLDIERS

(By Associated Press)
New York, Dec. 11.—Welcomed home as heroes, 7,700 soldiers, sailors and marines, representing about every state, entered fog-bound New York Harbor today in five big transports. The tales these men told of each other's work in the great fight was inspiring.

Many of the men were welcomed for life, while others were hobnobbing about on benches. Many were rushed to hospitals while the others were sent to the camps to be discharged and sent home. An illustration of the spirit of some of the men was shown in the case of Captain Glazebrook of Washington, D. C., a member of the 12th field artillery, who was shot through the lungs and gassed and wounded in the leg. He was in a hospital when he stole from his cot, assembled a uniform, and rode 30 miles on an army truck to the front to get into action at St. Mihiel. Six days later he was once more back in the hospital, gasped. When asked what happened, he said that the Chief Surgeon gave him "hell" and said that if he lived and he did not think he would, he would be court-martialed, but he heard the surgeon laugh outside the door and knew that he was safe.

I have practiced dentistry in Portsmouth for the past four years and during that time I have built up the largest practice in New Hampshire. I have done this by honest methods, absolute painless methods and perfect work and I firmly believe that the public, knowing these facts to be true, will guard themselves and act accordingly.

(DR. T. T. ESTABROOKS vs. "THE IMITATOR")

Look well into the record of your dentist.

BEWARE of imitation painless dentists who generally follow in my path, hinting vaguely that they have some of the wonderful inventions that I have; imitate and copy my methods in the hope that they may reap some of the benefit justly mine.

Nowhere in Portsmouth can one obtain the expert dental work at the low cost I charge them, except in my office where one will find a staff of expert dentists whose reputation compares favorably with the best dentists in the country.

CAMP DEVENS WELCOMES SOLDIERS

(By Associated Press)
Ayer, Dec. 11.—Camp Devens gave a cordial welcome to the 1100 officers and men from overseas who were sent here direct from the transport Canada, which arrived in Boston harbor this forenoon. A large number of the troops turned out to meet the returning soldiers and they met the two trains which arrived in a snow storm.

They marched from the train to the Camp headed by the depot brigade band and they were assigned to the barracks made vacant by the departure of the 42d regiment.

Here, Dec. 11.—Gustave Ador was elected president today of the Swiss confederacy. He was president of the Swiss council and also of the Red Cross.

"LILLE MOTHERS" AFTER THE KAISER

(By Associated Press)
Paris, Dec. 11.—Legal action against the former German Emperor has been commenced by an organization of "Lille mothers." The demand for prosecution states that the commanders of the German army in April, 1918, directed that mother girls be carried away from their families and they were forced into close contact with notorious women.

Non-Partisanship in City Affairs.

In nine out of the fourteen cities where elections were held on Tuesday in Massachusetts, non-partisan candidates were named for all offices. When will Portsmouth decide to get together and cut out petty political squabbles and put the old town on a clean business basis?

A Wrong Principle.

At a meeting of the National Woman's Suffrage Association in Washington a few days ago a resolution was passed calling upon the United States Senate for the immediate passage of the suffrage amendment "in recognition of the services rendered by the women of the country during the war." A number of speakers dwell upon the efforts of American women in support of the country's fighting forces. It was recalled that a pledge of loyalty and service was given by the association to the government when it entered the war, and it was said the pledge had been faithfully kept, which is true.

But is it not in poor taste to ask for the passage of such an amendment as a reward for services rendered? Those services were supposed to be prompted by patriotism, and the services of women were by no means confined to members of the Suffrage Association. Thousands of anti-suffragists rendered as loyal service as the suffragists did and have as good a right to ask the Senate to turn down suffrage as the reward for their efforts as the suffragists have to demand the passage of the amendment in recognition of the work they performed.

And this brings us to the point at issue, which is that the question of woman's suffrage should be dealt with on its merits, and that the amendment should neither be passed nor defeated as a "reward" to anybody. All patriotic people, both men and women, did their full duty in the war, and a sorry mess would result from any attempt to give the various cliques, factions and organizations what they might like as a "reward." There would be license in some places, no license in others, Sunday baseball in some places and "blue-law" Sundays in others, and there would be no end to the pulling and hauling if the government were to attempt to satisfy everybody who aided in the war by giving them the legislation they might ask for.

The principle involved is wrong. The cause of suffrage is moving steadily forward and there are arguments enough in its favor without tugging in the fact that the suffragists performed patriotic work at a time when such work was needed. Equally valid claims could be made by the anti-suffragists, the license forces, the prohibitionists and every other organization in the country.

Legislation should be for the benefit of the country as a whole and should never be enacted as a "reward" to any class or organization. Departure from this principle would be fraught with danger, and for this reason it is to be hoped that all who ask for legislation will be required to base their claims on something more substantial than a desire for reward for services they may have performed in behalf of any cause, no matter how meritorious.

One of the worst bits of drivel that has yet appeared in print is the prediction of a Boston clergyman that the time will come when Americans in Great Britain and Britons in America will be able to take part in politics without being naturalized. Such talk as that is rot with a capital R.

If it is a busy time for the dreadnaughts in spite of the fact that the war is over. Ten of them which are to escort the President into French waters will immediately load up with American troops and bring them home. And there will be no submarines to look out for on the way over.

The estimate for naval expenditures for the coming year has been cut more than a billion dollars. Step by step, the country will work its way back to a peace basis, but it will be a long time before the government's expenditures reach the pre-war level.

Postmaster General Bursleson thinks the telegraph and telephone business should remain permanently in the hands of the government. But there are others who will be heard from before this question is settled.

It is said that the American troops in Germany are making a very favorable impression on the natives. But the impression they made on them before the fighting ceased was not so favorable.

The Germans are reported to be calling themselves the "vanquished victors." Their worst enemies ought not to begrudge them the satisfaction they can get out of that.

BRITISH SHOT TWELVE SPIES DURING WAR

Two Women Condemned but Reprieved.

London, Dec. 12.—During the war 12 spies were shot in the Tower of London, according to the report now current. Carl Hans Lody, alias Ingles, at one time a resident of Omaha, was the first to be executed.

Two women spies were sentenced to death, but were reprieved, the sentence being committed to long prison terms. One of the women, Lizzie Werthe, regarded as very dangerous, was tried in company with a man named Howlands. Howlands was executed. This couple made frequent journeys between London and Rosyth, Scotland, and obtained information regarding the movements of the British fleet. This information, however, it is declared, never reached Germany.

The other woman spy was Eva de Baunouville, who is now undergoing penal servitude for life.

One spy hanged himself in Brixton prison, while many others convicted of espionage escaped the extreme penalty.

PEOPLE'S OPINIONS

Kittery, Me.,
December 10, 1918.

Editor:
Sir,
In all the happiness and thanksgiving which is surging over the country at the termination of hostilities in Europe I wonder is there a thought that some at least of the exhibition and sentiment is on the surface and that many of the celebrators are privately acting toward the dependents of the soldiers at the front in a manner that suggests the German treatment of the Belgians rather than an exhibition of American friendliness to its fighters?

Let the following true statement answer the question.
My husband has been at the front from the beginning of the entry of the United States into the war as a member of the Marine Corps. His family consisting of his wife, myself, and three children, have occupied premises in Kittery, Me., since that time. Recently a merchant in the village purchased the house and immediately gave notice that he must have immediate possession, knowing that there were no other houses to be obtained in the neighborhood.

Upon representation being made to him of the fact that the United States had made provision that such eviction, for such it amounted to, should not occur during the absence of the soldier at the front, he engaged the legal effort of a local lawyer, compelled me, only recently returned from the Portsmouth hospital after an operation, to appear in court, and the latter, in spite of the pleading of my counsel engaged by me out of the scanty pay of a soldier, obtained an order to compel me to vacate the premises.

I may say here that the rent was always paid promptly until this action, when all offers of payment were refused by these patriots.

I am now threatened with forcible eviction notwithstanding the severity of the weather and the fact that there are no houses within my means to enter. The cost of removing to another town is prohibitive and to store my furniture and pay hotel expenses is impossible on a soldier's pay.

This in brief is the position of the family of a soldier still in France, made possible by the action of a few of those who are shouting loudest about the wonderful work of the boys "over there" and the great victory for democracy.

I ask you, is there in the record of the actions of the German autocracy anything worse, I refrain from giving the names of the perpetrators but if you deem it desirable I will willingly do so.

Yours faithfully,
A SOLDIER'S WIFE.

Largest Naval Base

American Naval bases in the Atlantic, Pacific and Caribbean Sea will be measurably strengthened with surplus equipment manufactured for the war and now released as in process of release.

While the great fleet base in Hampton Roads has not been wholly completed, it is well on the way toward being the most extensive establishment of its kind undertaken by the navy. From the navy's standpoint, the Hampton Roads base is one of the blessings of the war. It is designed to take care of the entire Atlantic fleet.

veloped in the Virgin Islands and the big Guantanamo base will be strengthened. The release of aircraft and other equipment no longer required for war purposes will make possible important developments at our several bases. This is true of Pearl Island (Hawaii), Guam and Philippines. The navy possesses bases that are capable of extensive development and improvement, but Congress has not seen fit to authorize such development.

Can Go In at 17

The navy department has notified recruiting officers that the age limit for enlistments has been lowered to 17. Young men below the age of 18 will be required to furnish parents or guardians' consent before being accepted. All men enlisting before the holidays will be granted leave until Jan. 1 if they so desire.

Will Return Mine Layers

The Arctostock and Shammut, formerly the Bunker Hill and Massachusetts of the Eastern Steamship line, that were converted into mine layers, are expected to return to the Charleston yard and be restored to their original condition.

All Prisoners Gone

The prison ship Southern is now classed as the yard receiving ship having transferred nearly two hundred prisoners to the naval prison and new prison barracks. A small working party of prisoners is engaged in cleaning up the former floating prison. In the future all recruiting for the navy will be carried on aboard the ship which will be the temporary home for recruits. The naval band will still be officially attached there as well as the enlisted forces of the yard.

No If It Cost $13

When several naval reserves were released at the Charlestown yard on Wednesday one of them apparently wanted a souvenir and appealed to the commanding officer to be allowed to keep his bananook. When informed that it would cost him $13 the idea passed quickly out of his head.

Had to Return

The French cruiser Diana that left the Charlestown yard on Tuesday having in tow another ship was obliged to return Wednesday morning, as it was discovered when some distance out that the second vessel showed signs of leaking.

Marines Will Pos.

A marine detachment and sergeant will appear in a tableau scene of the coming mixed theatrical to be given by the yard employees on Dec. 19-20. This is to be one of the hits of the show.

Two Issues Combined

The next issue of the Life Buoy, the official monthly book of the yard, will be combined and issued under November and December heading.

Will Marry Tonight

Orien Judson Walker of the yard marine guard will be united in marriage in this city tonight.

Nearly Ready to Come.

The new ambulance to be used by the yard dispensary will shortly be delivered by the builders at Amesbury.

SUPERIOR COURT

The defence in the case of Miss H. Augusta Morden of Exeter against the Boston and Maine and Warren Brothers was heard in the superior court today. The plaintiffs side was concluded early in the morning session.

Chamber of Commerce records at Little, Mont., show that the majority of the 94,000 inhabitants of the city are unmarried, although of marriageable age there are about 8000 families containing 26,000 persons in Little.

umn under "Consumer" the first price given opposite a commodity is the fair price at a "Cash and Carry" store where the retailer does not deliver goods or extend credit. The second price given is the fair price at a store that delivers goods and extends credit.

Consumers are asked to report to the Local Food Administrator any case in which a retailer charges a higher price than those here quoted. The consumer should bring in or send in the sales slip covering the transaction.

LETTERS FROM OVER THERE

A letter was received this week by Harry Sussman from his son, Joseph Sussman, one of the popular local boys who is serving in the National Army in France. The letter was written long before the armistice, having been delayed but nevertheless is interesting to read. It says in part:

We stayed back of the lines for about 15 days and we had a fine time while we were there and we hardly did any drill but hung around our buddies and killed time. Once in a while they would chase us out for a little squad east and west, but we managed to get out of all we could. The headquarters detail has it pretty soft back of the lines. Now we have moved to another front and this is supposed to be a very quiet sector altho Jerry has sent over a couple of burrages the first two nights, but only near enough so we could hear his guns.

This is the prettiest place that we have been in France yet and the country is full of high hills. From the one in back of us we can see clear into Germany. Thirty-five villages and towns can be seen with the naked eye and it is wonderful just to go up there and look around. I have been up twice and I am going up again. While I was there I met my friend John Flanagan who I went around with in the training school. I have been looking for him for two months and I was mighty glad to see him up there.

On the same hill there is a plum orchard and I picked myself a handful and went down to our kitchen and made a fine plum stew. That is the only thing that bothers me is eats and when I don't get what I want in our mess I spend about all my money for food.

The fellows have a new way to catch fish. They go down to the river with some hand grenades and throw them in the water and kill a bunch and then pull them out as they float down the stream. So many fellows tried it that they put a stop to it. Another funny thing is the sort of mule understanding between the French and Germans over the fighting. We are on one side and they are on the other of the river and the two bridges are within rifle shot of each other. When the French go out to fish Jerry never bothers him and lets him fish in peace and the French allow the same privilege to the Germans. This same thing holds good for two towns; there is one of the allies that the Germans have never shelled and there is a German one that the French never shelled. This is an old French sector and we are taking it over very fast and some fine day somebody will start the fireworks for probably.

You probably think that we are fighting all the time, but this is not so. Of course on a quiet front there is only a few artillery shells thrown over and a few raids pulled off, but even so the fighting that is really done is between dark and dawn and we generally have a nice little artillery barrage in the morning to tell us that it is pretty near time for breakfast.

From this hill we could see the Germans out drilling and see them working in the fields and some in swimming. At times it is so nice and quiet that you would never know the war was going on.

Our artillery is close by and I saw a captain that I knew in it and I am going to try to see if I can get transferred to his outfit. I certainly would love to be an observer for the rest of the war on this hill and it is great up there.

Well I am getting along fine but I don't get many letters from home and you probably think the same of me. Let me know if my package of razors got home because if it did I am going to send some real French souvenirs.

Love to all

Little Golden Slippers

By AGNES C. BROGAN

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

Dean Travis stood in the dark, muddy road and looked about him perplexedly. It was evident that in this strange country he had lost his way. Here he was, near the end of his well-earned fortnight, and not one eventful thing had happened. So long he had looked forward to seeing a little corner of France under favorable conditions, and now, tonight, at the climax of his holiday, he was lost on a rough hilly road. How far the friend had brought him in his car, dropping him off at a crossroads, Dean did not know. Nor how many miles his unaccustomed feet had since tramped the way.

He had been too much absorbed in his own thoughts to take heed of time or distance. Long-reaching shadows now told him that twilight would soon descend upon the unfamiliar road; the cottages he remembered passing here and there had quite disappeared. The very landscape seemed to have a forsaken air. He wondered if he had stumbled into more wreckage of the ruins. Then, like a gleam of promise, for it was growing cold as well as dark, down the road streamed a light.

Dean, glancing ahead, saw that the light came from the rear of a turreted mansion.

"What," asked a guttural voice, "do you wish, Monsieur?"

"I am a soldier of the United States army," Dean replied. "I would like information to continue my way back to the city and, if possible, some food." Dean smiled. "I am very hungry," he boyishly confessed.

"We can refuse an American soldier no assistance," came back the reassured voice.

Heavy bolts were withdrawn and the door opened wide. Dean Travis caught his breath in astonishment and admiration.

The little creature before him, who spoke his own language perfectly, had all the characteristic charm of a plump French maiden.

That in hand, Dean followed down long halls to the banquet room, from which window the light had led. Beneath one gleaming chandelier a small table was placed for the evening meal, which a bowed old French woman was even then serving. In French the girl called for an extra plate, placing the maddening woman with the explanation that this "was an American soldier."

She was all eyes questioning.

"How far has the allied army advanced and must not victory soon be theirs? Some of those unspeakable Germans passed through our village," she told him. "That is why it is deserted. That is why I am alone with old Genie; she would not leave me. They came through the house in search of food and I"—she laughed, pleased with memory of her own daring—"I stepped out of my upper room upon a long stone ledge. I had but to creep on a little way to where thick vines covered me completely. I could even peep at the men's rough faces through my green curtain, then—they were gone."

"I watched them go out through the gates before I came down to find Genie, trembling. Since then we have been alone."

"Why," demanded Dean, "do you stay here? Why do you not go away?"

"Where?" asked the girl. She held out empty palms. "We have nothing." She smiled again, as if the forlorn fact were amusing. "I had even in shoes; mine had worn to nothing, so I went to the attic and found there these golden slippers. An ancestor, perhaps—or my mother—there were velvet gowns buried in the attic, and slippers. Since then I have been going about her looks in trailing satin. When the war is over do you know what I shall do? I shall go to America—some way—I don't know how. Were you homesick when you came over, my soldier? Well, so I am homesick; always—always."

"But this is your home?" Dean asked, wondering. "You are French?"

"I am American," the girl replied. "Listen!"

"My mother came here, an American girl, years ago to study. My father, heir to this estate, loved and married her and kept her in this home of his father. My mother pined for her native land, so my father gave up all and went back with her, there, to live. So I, Amy La Feu, lived and was reared an American. When both my parents died I was very young and alone. Grandfather La Feu sent for me. The estate would be mine, he said, and all that he had, if I would remain in the home of my father. I repeat, I was penniless and alone. I came."

Suddenly the dark eyes filled with tears. "Then," added Amy La Feu, "grandfather also was gone, and with the terrible war—all that he had. So," she smiled again bravely, "I sit in the tower room now as I knit and pray for a kind deliverance to carry me back across the sea."

Dean Travis arose and came over to the girl. The look he bent upon her was fraught with tenderness.

"I know now," he said shakily, "that I did not lose my way tonight; I was only finding my way to you. Something tells me that I am to be your deliverer. Oh! little golden slippers, will you think of me while you watch from your tower?"

And impulsively Amy La Feu put both her hands in his.

"I will think of you surely, my soldier," she said.

TO AMY

(For The Herald.)
Storm clouds sweep by full of a far-off fear!
The day may be all darkness, or be clear,
I care not, O my Love, since thou art near
With charms more sweet than summer weather, dear.
The sun, the moon, the distant stars
may shine,
They cannot match those splendid eyes of thine.
Or dim the grace that makes thee
most divine.
O, might this winning sweetness yet be mine
With all the joys such loveliness enshrine!
Enchantingly hope grows faint with thy delay,
My heart is longing for some fairer day
When in sweet airs the yielding reassurance buds away
And clouds grow soft, while radiant sunbeams lay
A path of gold along my lonely way

SPECIAL AT THE SALVATION ARMY TONIGHT

There is to be a very special and interesting program at the Salvation Army Hall this evening. "Jesus of Nazareth" is the title of a lecture prepared by Archdeacon Sinclair and illustrated by 80 slides, copies of paintings by Hule, and four reels of moving pictures. This and two illustrated songs are the features of the program tonight, and should be missed by no one. The projection machines used cannot be beaten in this state and with an experienced operator no better picture could be desired.

ATLANTIC HEIGHTS DISPUTE ADJUSTED

At a meeting held this morning at Atlantic Heights, General Superintendent Roberts of the National Engineering Corporation announced that the carpenters on the work would be paid hereafter at the 50 cents per hour rate in accordance with the wage scale of Carpenters' Local No. 241. He read authorization from the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which authorization he had asked for when the matter was first presented to him.

The meeting was addressed by Business Agent R. S. Weston, who gave details of conferences held between the committee and the management and advised settlement of the dispute. The other members of the committee were J. M. Conrad and G. Gaudette. By a unanimous vote the carpenters accepted the recommendation of their committee and the explanation of Mr. Roberts.

The committee and the management expressed satisfaction at the outcome and the settlement was effected in a courteous way which will mean harmonious relations and mutual respect in the future.

A. G. Schenckhoff, Project Superintendent, and Joseph J. Darius, Industrial Relations Representative, both of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, aided in the adjustment.

SERVED SUPPER AT Y. M. C. A.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. served one of its excellent suppers last evening at the Y. M. C. A. building to enlisted men and shipyard workers and about 70 were in attendance. Supper was served at 6 o'clock, the menu including roast beef, mashed potato, squash, creamed carrots, steamed pudding with sauce, hot rolls and coffee. There was a fine spirit among the men and the sociability at the tables was enjoyed as well as the inviting repast. The food was all home cooked and the price of the supper made as low as possible for the men.

It is hoped to have these suppers for enlisted men and shipyard workers each Wednesday evening instead of entertainments.

RED CROSS ROLL CALL

On Monday next, December 16, the Red Cross Roll Call for Universal Membership will begin, and it will continue intensively for one week.

A comprehensive plan of solicitation calculated to minimize the work and avoid duplication, has been worked out, whereby every man, woman and child will be afforded the privilege of paying one dollar and becoming a member of the Red Cross for the year 1919. The work "privilege" is used advisedly. It is a privilege, especially for people in moderate circumstances, to become identified on an equality with those of abundant means, with the work of the Red Cross, which is to be, in the future, as it has been in the past, upon a liberal scale, and beautiful and inspiring in character.

As no further campaign for war funds will be conducted the future extent of Red Cross activities will be determined by the response given to the Roll Call appeal.

It cannot be necessary to recount the ministrations of mercy that have engaged the Red Cross in times gone by. It is a stimulating story of unselfish service founded upon love and sympathy. The future purpose of the Red Cross is no less ambitious than its past is laudable. It has performed fully its share in making the world safe for democracy. It now faces the no less task of making democracy safe for the world. In the wake of war inevitably follows war's appalling consequences including depopulation and suffering. Sweetly and sympathetically extending the healing hand of beneficence to the world war's unfortunate victims is but one more phase of Red Cross effort. Other tasks of equal importance and equally appealing occur to all.

MAJOR WRIGHT AND OUR DUTY

The following abstract of a letter to "The Herald" will prove of interest:
"During the demobilization period it is vitally important that every citizen help to prepare for the proper reception of the boys returning from overseas and from the camps and keep up their morale. Will you, therefore, assist us by calling the attention of your readers during this week, through your editorial and news column, to two things?"

First: The help of cheerful uplifting letters to the boys overseas and in the camps, in keeping up their morale during the remaining time of service.

Second: The necessity of all local authorities and every citizen in the country doing everything in their power to keep the communities clean and free from every kind of prostitution and degrading influence which, unless constantly and vigorously repressed, will during demobilization strike to undermine the splendid moral and physical condition of the boys developed through the War Department's efforts."

SEES YARDS BUSY FOR 8 OR 9 YEARS

A. I. S. C. Official Says World
Needs 40,000,000 Tons Shipping.

Peter O. Knight, vice president and general counsel of the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, recently gave out an interview in Philadelphia on the future of the Merchant Marine which, by reason of the position of Mr. Knight and his knowledge of the subject, is worthy of reputation. Mr. Knight takes an optimistic view of the shipbuilding possibilities in America, but declares that there must be some radical changes in laws governing American shipping if the United States Merchant Marine is to compete with the trade carriers of other nations.

Mr. Knight said he believed that the Emergency Fleet Corporation should continue in active control of shipbuilding, but that it should confine itself in the future to steel ships, for permanent use, and drop the entire program of wood and concrete ship construction.

"The needs of the world's shipping," said Mr. Knight, "call for the construction of thirty-five to forty million tons immediately. In August, 1914, there were 50,000,000 tons of shipping in the world. To take care of the growing commerce, there will, within a few years, be need for fifty-five to sixty million tons. The world's tonnage today amounts to about 40,000,000, having been reduced to that figure by the submarine sinkings.

"You may be sure that, with the materials, resources and man-power that there are in the world and the necessity for using so much man-power, materials and resources in reconstructing devastated portions of Europe, and in carrying on the activities in this country which were necessarily interrupted by the war, it will take eight or nine years to supply the deficiency in ships.

"After the deficiency in ships has been supplied," continued Mr. Knight, "the future of shipbuilding will depend upon the ingenuity, resources and brains of the country."

"Now the trouble is," he said, "that the people of this nation have been too provincial and they are not aroused to the necessity for maintaining the shipbuilding industry and of our country having a sufficient merchant marine to take care of its commerce. How to arouse them to the necessities of the situation is the most important question confronting the country."

"When the people once are satisfied that the shipping industry must be maintained and that the American citizen must be able to own and operate a ship under the flag of his country, all of which will be for the benefit of the nation at large, then the question of repealing burdensome legislation will be mere detail that will be taken care of very quickly."
